Clagg making short-term plans for Marshall

By Kelly J. Messinger

Acting President Sam E. Clagg does not see himself as a hapless airplane pilot sentenced to fly in a four month holding pattern over Marshall University.

Clagg, who has had the position for more than a month, said he has continued all plans pursued by Resigning President Robert B. Hayes, whose resignation is effective Aug. 31, and has implemented a few projects of his own.

One project Clagg began while he was chairman of the Geography Department was assessing the campus for barriers to handicapped students and creating a map for them.

"My cartographers found places where there were no curb cuts and other barriers for wheelchairs," he said. "I sent a letter to Dr. Hayes. When I came in as president I dug that letter up."

As chairman of the Planning Advisory Committee, Clagg is also a member of one of its subcommittees, the Sesquicentennial Planning Committee. In 1987 Marshall will be 150 years old. Currently, Clagg said he has contacted a large number of colleges and universities to see how they celebrated 100, 150 and 200 year anniversaries.

"We would like to make the celebration last a full academic year," he said.

In lieu of the Athletic Department's looming budget deficit, Clagg said he had been looking into the matter and it should be under control by the time the new president takes office.

For the faculty, Clagg said he would try some sabbatical leaves with the "meager" money which will be available in the next fiscal year.

Overall, Clagg said he feels faculty and staff morale has improved since Hayes' resignation.

"I think the morale is good now," he said. "The faculty is refreshed. They have had their R & R."

The number of faculty resignations in the wake of the state's budget crisis does not alarm Clagg.

"We have had nine fewer resignations this year than last year," he said. "It's usually the young and mobile who leave. Those who stay are here because they love Marshall University, Huntington and students. A lot of rewards can't be taken to the bank."

In reflecting on his past month in the president's chair, Clagg said he has had no surprises.

"As long as I have been here it would be hard to surprise me in a big way. I have no administrative aspirations, but I knew if we brought anyone in from the Board of Regents staff or from outside there would be surprises for them.

"In the late 50s and early 60s I had administrative invitations to apply for jobs, but I resisted."

However, Clagg said in accepting his current post, "I haven't had a day yet when I've regretted the decision."

State starts deficit audit

By Rose Hutchinson

Figures for a 1983 audit of Marshall University's Athletic Department have not been released because the audit will not start until after June 30, according to Legislative Auditor Encil Bailey.

"We can't start the new audit until after the books are closed June 30," Bailey said. (West Virginia's fiscal year begins July 1 and ends the following June 30)

He said the special audit has been requested by the Board of Regents because the deficit found in the Athletic Department and the publicity which ultimately resulted in the resignation of President Robert B. Hayes.

"They asked for a special audit because of the publicity," Bailey said. A normal audit of the 1982 accounts is being finished, he said, and the new audit will focus on problems revolving around the athletic deficits.

Bailey said he expected the audit to be completed in four to six weeks, but it would depend on what was found.

"It depends on what kinds of problems you run in to," he said. "It may not take so long since most of this stuff has already been documented."

According to a story in the Charleston Gazette Hayes said there had been shortages in four athletic revenue sources -- football ticket sales, private contributions, basketball revenues and concessions -- which had caused budget estimates to go awry. The estimated amount of the deficit is about $165,000.

Hayes looking back, but moving on

By Kelly J. Messinger

The large white house overlooking Ritter Park on 13th Ave. knows its occupants of the past nine years are busy. Battered boxes filled with books and a small army of suitcases are waiting quietly for the end of August when Dr. Robert B. Hayes and his wife, Katy, must leave.

Dressed in khaki slacks and a yellow polo shirt, which highlighted his lightly tanned skin, Hayes reflected on the changes in his life since his resignation.

"For 26 years I was an administrator," he said. "I put a tie on every morning. Now for those first two hours in the morning I have to gear down."

Hayes still has many activities which keep him busy. He said he has been on campus several times in the past month for meetings related to his professorship in education administration. His office in lenkins Hall already has books on its shelves, and he is also advising a student working on a dissertation.

A few weeks ago a vacation in Florida and a wedding in Ohio were pleasant diversions, he said. Babysitting his grandchildren and taking them to the park were things he said he never had time for but now enjoys.

"Being an administrator eats you up," he said. "It takes every minute of every day. The problems never leave. My children had asked me months ago to quit."

Hayes said he has talked to Acting President Sam E. Clagg only once.

"The ex-president must be completely removed from office," he said. "I am going to stay out of all dealings with the faculty."

Hayes added he had "no idea" of who the next president would be.

The intensity of the faculty and community support surprised him.

"I had no idea (it would happen)," he said. "You can take a lot of things for granted while living in a community."

Hayes stated again he had no plans of leaving Huntington.

"This is my home," he said. "Moving is very unlikely."

But moving into his private Huntington residence is imminent. The Hayes' bought the house 18 years ago, and Hayes said a great deal of work must be done.

Furniture for all rooms but the bedrooms must be purchased, the kitchen must be re-designed, carpet and linoleum will be laid and every wall will be painted or wallpapered, he said.

In retrospect, Hayes said he was pleased with his presidency.

"It was a good nine years," he said. "I can look back on them with no regrets. It was a lot of fun and teaching will be also."

BOR accepts MU presidency applications

Applications for the Marshall University presidency are now being accepted, according an MU news release, and the state Board of Regents has established an October 1 deadline.

Marshall's 11-member Institutional Board of Advisors is a search and screening committee for the position. This board, as well as the BOR, may add three faculty members each to the committee.

Applications or nominations should be sent, with resumes, to: Presidential Search, West Virginia Board of Regents, 950 Kanawha Boulevard East, Charleston, W. Va., 25301.

OURS/YOURS A page of opinion

Mystery surrounds forced resignation of Hayes

Ssshhh . . . it's a secret.

The Board of Regents has adopted this attitude in dealing with the forced resignation of former Marshall University president Robert B. Hayes. In imperialistic hauteur the BOR decreed the public to be unentitled to hear the reasoning and full story behind Hayes' departure.

Questions are left unanswered in all quarters as to the exact argument the BOR used in concluding no alternative other than a request for his resignation. Students, faculty and administration ponder the rumors circulated about the Athletic Department and the deficit. Although a deficit in the athletic budget may be a valid reason for the dismissal of a university president, was it the only determinate factor?

The deficit is tagged a catalysis for the situation, but there seems to be more than meets the public's curious eye. When asked for comment, BOR spokespersons repeatedly refuse to discuss the hows and whys of their judgment.

A legislative audit may unearth more facts contributing to the ultimate unseating of Hayes, but already a month has passed without the public's curiosity and puzzlement being satisfied. Besides the results of the audit have not been released to the public which raises yet another question. In addition, the BOR chose an excellent time to announce Hayes' leaving since the the bulk of the Marshall community had already left campus.

The BOR, as a voice for the members of higher education in West Virginia, is talking only to itself. The board should be informative to taxpayers and supporters of higher education who have every right to know the reason leading to the resignation a West Virginia university president. Also, members of the Marshall community have the right to know if the BOR's decision was based on valid and justifiable factors.

We do not know if Hayes deserved to be asked to resign but we do insist that the reasoning behind his resignation be made public.

The cluttered life

By Debra A. Jackson

Disorganization should be my middle name. From class syllabi buried between stacks of partially read magazines and assorted writing projects to my daily schedule, which is non-existent, I take each moment as it comes. Unfortunately, this results in a lot of wasted time.

I've read books about time management and tried to reform, but I always end up losing my calendar in the mess on my desk. Besides, taking things as they come makes life more interesting, even though I never seem to get everything done.

Take vacation for example. I went home with visions of returning to Huntington from a week full of seeing old friends, lying in the sun and having jogged an hour a day.

I came back and had talked to one friend on the phone, watched the rain fall and gone jogging twice.

My desk is about as organized as my life is. Make that desks. I have two now; one at the apartment, one here at The Parthenon office. I try cleaning them off and junking the "trash," but usually only succeed in transferring things from one pile to another and end up with five or six stacks of assorted items scattered on the desk. Still unorganized, but it looks neat. Until I start working again.

Someday I may get my act together and plan my days on my uncluttered, nicely arranged desk and proceed according to schedule. Until then, I'll ramble on, following my unplanned schedule. But I don't think that's what "live for the moment" really means.

Tell us what you think

In summer school, everything seems condensed. The semesters are shorter; time between tests seems to shrink. Only the amount of material stays the same.

Although programs and activities as well as classes aren't as varied, plenty still goes on. We at The Parthenon will do our best to keep you informed in a new way. Each weekly "magazine" will feature a theme, news section, a calendar and other items. This page, "Ours/Yours" is an interchange: our comments and opinions and your suggestions, ideas or gripes. Letters are welcome, as

Head willy-nilly to Chili Willi's

By Linda Cole Moffett

Describing a restaurant as "a little hole in the wall" is not usually complimentary. But Chili Willi's Mexican Cantina, one of Huntington's smallest restaurants, is an exception.

Chili Willi's is located downtown at 1019 4th Ave. It's tucked between a movie theater and the Elks Home. You'll miss it if you walk by too fast.

It is a narrow little place with seating for 36, in either booths or at the counter. The interior, while a bit cramped, does try to put the eater in a "south-of-border" mood. There are colorful pinatas hanging on the ceiling, as well as posters, Mexican blankets and a sombrero on the walls.

I ate at Chili Willi's on a Monday during the lunch rush. I chose a Super Burrito, priced at $2.95. It contained shredded beef, kidney beans, green onions, tomatoes, lettuce, black olives, two kinds of cheese and salsa and was topped with sour cream and guacamole. I found the Super Burrito to be large and quite delicious.

My friend ordered the Pollo Flauta, a deep fried burrito of shredded chicken and cheese. While very tasty, he thought it paled in comparison with the Super Burrito.

A basket of corn chips and salsa (you have a choice of mild or hot) are free but brought to the table only on request. We chose the mild salsa, which should be comfortable for most American tastes. The hot salsa is purported to be more of the "real thing" ... next time I'll try some.

The waitresses were informal and efficient but our meal took a bit longer than I expected.

The prices are very reasonable, ranging from a taco at $1.25 to a deluxe combination dinner at $7.95. Other menu selections include an Avocado and Fruit Salad (1.75), Chili Willi's Bowl of Red (2.95), Gringo's Steak Sandwich (3.50) and Huevos Ranchero (2.25). There are several kinds of beer available, including a Mexican import.

Chili Willi's is a casual place that's easy on a student's budget. If you're a fan of Mexican food, or just ready for something new, you won't be disappointed.

Expect the unexpected

Mystery to open summer theatre season

By Jeff Seager

When the curtain rises this evening in Old Main Auditorium, the unexpected can be expected.

Deathtrap, the popular Broadway mystery-thriller by Ira Levin, will open Marshall University Theatre's summer season with more than a few surprises, according to director N. Bennett East.

The cast is headed by John Amedro, a former Marshall student who has performed off-Broadway and has been tentatively offered a Broadway role in a play not yet in production.

Amedro appears here as Sidney Bruhl, an established playwright frustrated by writer's block. When he receives a brilliantly written thriller in the mail from a hopeful young writer (Craig Johnson), he begins plotting to appropriate the play.

His wife Myra (Elizabeth Stephenson) tries to stop him, leading to a series of intriguing plot twists that, according to East, are the source of the play's great popularity.

The audience is involved in a continual guessing-game, aided by Rehana Ten Dorp (Azita Fareydoon-Nezhad), Bruhl's psychic neighbor who drops in periodically to warn of impending doom.

Bruhl's lawyer is played by David Cook, another former Marshall student who has been active in local community theatre.

"These actors have worked well together," East said of rehearsals for the performance, "and a strong camaraderie has developed among the cast."

The play will be presented tonight, Friday and Saturday. Tickets are available at the theatre office in Old Main 23B or at the door. Reservations may be made by calling 696-2306. Curtain time for all performances is 8 p.m.

Maddox succeeds Stewart

By Cindy Parkey

The chairman of Marshall's history department has been named to dual posts of Graduate School dean and associate provost, according to Acting President Sam E. Clagg and Provost Olen E. Jones.

Dr. Robert F. Maddox assumes his new position on July 1. He succeeds Dr. Paul D. Stewart, Graduate Dean since 1974, who announced his retirement this spring.

Clagg said the new dean's appointment was based on the recommendation of a search committee made up of students and faculty members.

"After screening numerous applicants from both inside and outside the university, the committee recommended that Dr. Maddox be given the assignment," he said.

Maddox has been a member of the faculty since 1966. A native of St. Albans, the history professor earned his baccalaureate degree from Morris Harvey College (now the University of Charleston), his M.A. degree from Marshall University and his Ph.D. from the University of Kentucky. He became chairman of the history department in 1980.

In addition to serving as department chairman and teaching, Maddox has directed Marshall's Oral History of Appalachia Program and has served as consultant for the Huntington Alloys Oral History Project. He has also worked with the Huntington District, U.S. Corps of Engineers on several oral history projects.

Maddox is the author of several articles for professional journals and has written a biography of the late senator Harley M. Kilgore, "The Senatorial Career of Harley Martin Kilgore," published by Garland Publishing as a part of the Modern American History series.

BOR president says pay increase will be top priority

By Debra A. Jackson

Quality of education and better salaries for state colleges and universities are "priorities" as far as John W. Saunders, president-elect of the state Board of Regents is concerned.

"I don't know if we could ever achieve high-ranking salaries, but I would like to see us stay within the range of the Southern Region Education Board," he said.

This year's committee hasn't been appointed yet, but Saunders said he was optimistic about his plans for higher education.

"Last year we received most of what we wanted except for raises," he said. "We did get a faculty improvement bill."

Saunders, who will move from presiding over Beckley College to the BOR presidency in July, said the board is working on a mandatory five-year-plan to present to the legislature.

Recommendations on the state's three medical schools will be included in the plan, but Saunders said it would be premature to make a statement on whether one would be phased out.

He would not comment on a previous statement made by Gov. John D. Rockefeller IV about the safety of Marshall's School of Medicine, saying, "I wouldn't want to upstage the governor by saying anything different."

Rockefeller was quoted in the Herald-Dispatch as saying, "The Marshall medical school is safe" and that it would be here as long as the state is.

Alexander named College of Business dean

Dr. Robert P. Alexander

By Cindy Parkey

A new dean has been selected for the Marshall University College of Business, according to Acting Marshall University President Sam E. Clagg and Provost Olen E. Jones.

Dr. Robert P. Alexander, professor of management and mayor of Huntington, was chosen by a search committee composed of representatives from the college's faculty, advisory board and the student body, Jones said.

"It is always rewarding to an institution to have an in-house candidate receive a vote of confidence from his colleagues," he said.

Alexander succeeds Dr. Sara E. Anderson, who announced her resignation as the college's chief administrator in January. Anderson will return to the classroom this fall after five years as dean and four years as associate dean. Alexander will assume his new position on September 1.

Alexander, who is a native of Cabell county received his baccalaureate and master's degrees from Marshall University and his Ph.D. from Ohio University. He served as career planning and placement director at Marshall from 1958 until 1966 and again in 1968.

In addition to teaching, Alexander has held a variety of College of Business posts, including student advising program coordinator and Masters of Business Administration degree program director. He was named management department chairman in 1975.

Alexander said he will continue to serve on Huntington City Council saying he saw no problems in handling both his campus and his civic responsibilities.

Alexander was recently appointed by West Virginia Senate President Warren McGraw, D-Wyoming, to the Joint Legislative Committee on Economic Development and Employment and has begun a three-year term as one of three trustees on the West Virginia Municipal League's Insurance Board.

Economy worries students

By Bobette Gilkerson

Budget cuts have clouded the educational future of Marshall University, according to summer-term students.

The budget has many students worried about the quality of their education in upcoming years.

"We are getting less education for more money," said Travis Cox, Elizabeth senior. Because of the lack of salary increases, Marshall won't be able to attract quality instructors, he said.

While the budget has students worried, tuition doesn't appear to be as much of a concern. Laura FitzMaurice, Chillicothe, Ohio, sophomore said, "Tuition is not that much of a problem. This school's tuition is so low compared with other universities that an increase isn't that bad. On the other hand, you get what you pay for and that's probably going to be less of an education in the future."

Students predict an enrollment decline if the budget is cut again. The decline will be gradual, so it won't show up during the fall term, FitzMaurice said.

"But ask me in another year," she said.

Although students look for an enrollment drop, those already enrolled aren't having second thoughts about continuing their education at Marshall. "I started here and I'm going to finish here," said Travis Cox, Elizabeth senior.

Students believe there will be little change in the budget this fall, but the future looks clouded.

"I don't think the University will ever close, but if the overall economic situation doesn't clear up, it might come close," said Ryan L. Henry, Barboursville senior.

Summer enrollment down 12 percent

By Linda Cole Moffett

The tentative enrollment figures for the first summer session are down 12 percent compared with last year at this time, according to William S. Deel, associate provost.

For the first session, 3,277 students are enrolled compared with 3,723 last year, Deel said. He said these figures are based on what the enrollment was on the fourth day of classes, June 17.

The Board of Regents will release the official figures, Deel said. They use the number of students enrolled on the tenth day of classes, he said.

Deel said enrollment may go up since there may be some late registrations or registrations for off-campus classes that have not been processed yet.

"A running account of enrollment is taken everyday," Deel said.

However, Deel said enrollment has not been growing as rapidly as last year.

Deel said it would be "pure speculation" to say why enrollment was down.

"It probably involves the economy," he said.

Deel said he thought the increase in tuition did not adversely affect the number of students enrolling. At least that has been historically true, he said.

According to the enrollment analysis, graduate students make up 29 percent of the students enrolled in the first summer session. Seniors account for 21 percent of the students. More than half of the students, or 59 percent, are full-time students taking six hours or more.

Enrollment for the second session is down two percent, Deel said. There are 1,409 students enrolled as of June 17 compared with 1,437 last year at that time.

Deel said he expects the enrollment for the second term to improve since regular registration continues until July 18.

Boys' basketball Girls' basketball camp

By Joe Harris

A camp for aspiring basketball players ages 12-years-old to senior high school will be conducted by the Marshall Basketball Coaching staff and Coach Rick Huckabay from July 4 to July 9.

The camp, which will take place in the Henderson Center, is designed to improve the participant's basketball playing ability.

Players will be housed on campus in the Twin Towers residence hall where meals will be provided. Participants will also have full use of all recreational facilities on campus. A certified athletic trainer will be on duty during the week to attend to minor illnesses and injuries.

Participants will require an $150 fee covering the entire cost of all instruction, insurance, meals and lodging for five nights. The cost for commuter participants is $100, which includes lunch and dinner.

A basketball camp for girls, ages 10-years-old to high school, is being conducted in the Henderson Center by Women's Basketball Coach Judy Southard.

The camp, which ends tomorrow, is being assisted by members of the Marshall University Basketball squad and is designed to improve the player's overall prowess.

Baby Bison camp

A "Baby Bison" basketball camp for boys and girls ages five to 12 years will be conducted by Marshall University Basketball Coach Rick Huckabay and members of the MU coaching staff from June 27 to July 1.

The camp, which begins at 9 a.m. daily, will concentrate on the fundamentals of basketball as well as developing a positive attitude toward the game.

Participants require a fee of $65 to cover all expenses and need to wear play clothes.

Better pay key to retaining faculty -- Jones

By Debra A. Jackson

Despite what people may think, faculty resignations at Marshall University aren't much higher this year than last year, according to Provost Olen E. Jones.

Resignations for the first six months of 1983 number 12 as compared to 22 last year, he said. The difference is that the resigning faculty have a higher profile.

For example, all the instructors except for the chairman of the Computer and Information Sciences department have resigned, and the W. Page Pitt School of Journalism will lose both an instructor and a director.

In spite of the losses, Jones said he is optimistic.

"We expect to be completely staffed for the fall term," he said.

However, because of the $123,000 spending cutback passed by the state Board of Regents in June, Jones said monies may not be available for part-time faculty for the second term.

"We will try to accommodate as many as we can," he said. Money from "accumulations," if there is any left by the second semester, will be used to pay the part-time faculty. Accumulations are monies saved from when faculty positions are left open or faculty members are reclassified to lower-paying positions.

If the monies aren't available, there will be no part-time sections for the second semester, he said.

A desire for higher salaries was the reason for most of the resignations, but in the case of the computer science department, faculty members left for positions in industry and one moved to a position in the Health Service Library, he said.

"We didn't lose them to other institutions," he said.

Faculty resignations have not created a problem with morale as much as not having a salary increase for the past two years, Jones said.

"Faculty salaries is a real key to maintaining quality instruction," he said.

More material, harder work describes summer classes

By Bobette Gilkerson

Theoretically, the hours of the summer class equal that of a fall class, however they are different.

"The concentration and rate of the material makes up for the shorter term," Laura FitzMaurice, sophomore from Chillicothe, Ohio, said. It's a lot of work at one time, she said, but it all evens out.

"The material covered in summer and fall terms is the same," said Phillip Modlin, assistant professor of biology.

"I believe my summer students tend to make better grades, however," he said. "They ask more and sometimes better questions than the fall classes. They seem truly interested in the class."

A couple of the reasons for attending summer classes were to pick up hours and the class size.

"With the class smaller, I get more individual help," FitzMaurice said.

Scott McCracken, sophomore from Milton said, "It's a good way to pick a couple of hours. I also appreciate the instructor having time for some individual help."

One problem facing the summer student and teacher, Modlin said, is the long class hours.

"The six weeks system was a lot better on everyone, but it ran into money problems," Modlin said.

Despite the hours, students and teachers said they thought the summer terms are wanted.
